Agostino concentrates his practice in criminal and civil tax matters before federal and state taxing authorities. He was an attorney with the IRS District Counsel Office and also served as a Special Assistant United States Attorney, concentrating in criminal tax prosecution. Agostino is a frequent lecturer on tax controversy and litigation matters.

Topic: Ethics

Meeting Description: Tax practitioners from both private practice and the government are regulated by a number of laws and regulations that govern their conduct on a day to day basis. How sure does a practitioner have to be about a position before he or she can advise a client that it is ok to report the position on the return? When is a taxpayer subject to penalties for tax return positions and when can the practitioner be subject to penalties? What rules govern the conduct of IRS agents and when can they get in trouble for crossing the line? This program will answer these and many other practical questions that arise in your daily practice.
